MiyoCats are small, fluffy, and often full of personality. They're curious creatures that love exploring, climbing, and sometimes knocking things over just for fun. They can be super affectionate, purring and cuddling when they feel like it, but also independent they like doing their own thing and might ignore you sometimes, just to remind you who's boss.

Woke up at 6:03 because the neighbour's rooster thinks 5:45 is reasonable. Lay there for twenty minutes scrolling X — everyone posting about "first day at Deloitte" or "off-campus offer letter arrived ". I closed the app so fast my thumb hurt. Then opened it again two minutes later like an idiot.

Classes were online today. Professor Sharma asked three people to explain the entire buck-boost converter working in one minute each. I wasn't picked, thank god, but I still felt guilty for not being ready anyway. Muted myself, turned off camera, stared at my own face in the little preview box. Eye bags have their own eye bags now.

Afternoon → tried to make viva notes for Power Electronics. Forty-seven pages of handwritten stuff from last semester + printed slides + random YouTube timestamps. Highlighted the same sentence six times without reading it. Kept thinking: "If the external asks something out of syllabus, I'm finished." Then remembered most externals ask the same five things every year. Still panicked.

Around 4:30 I opened LinkedIn "just to check notifications". Big mistake. Saw three connections from my batch already tagged in "proud to join as Graduate Engineer Trainee" posts. One of them has lower CGPA than me. How? I sat there for forty minutes comparing resumes in my head. Mine looks like it was written by someone who's trying very hard to sound employable but failing.

Dinner was whatever was left in the fridge daal bhat from yesterday + one over-boiled egg. Ate while watching placement preparation videos on 1.5× speed. Guy was saying "revise aptitude + be confident + prepare story for every project". I laughed out loud, alone. Confidence left the chat in 3rd semester.
